This book is a scholarly companion to the Munda Cultural Dataset (MCD) v1.0, an evidence-linked research resource developed to document, organize, examine, and preserve cultural knowledge concerning Munda communities across the human life course, from birth to burial and remembrance.

The book distinguishes source-reported accounts, historical documentation, field observations, and community-validated knowledge wherever such distinctions can be established. Candidate cultural indicators constitute a structured framework for inquiry and documentation; their inclusion does not imply that every practice is universal, uniform, or presently observed across all Munda communities. Cultural variation across place, community, generation, time, and context is therefore treated as evidence to be documented rather than as inconsistency to be removed.

The MCD software and structured data are released separately under the Apache License 2.0. Textual materials, photographs, audio and video recordings, interviews, archival materials, and community-contributed knowledge may be subject to separate copyright, consent, access, attribution, cultural-sensitivity, or reuse conditions.

Preface: From the First Breath to Memory

Johar

Johar. Perhaps there is no better way to enter this book than with a greeting, because culture begins not in a definition but in an encounter—one person recognizing another, one generation receiving the next.

Imagine a child born into a Munda household. The child knows no word for family, no killi, no song, no dance, no story of the land. Yet long before the child can speak, a cultural world has already gathered around that new life. There are relationships into which the child has arrived, words waiting to be learned, foods whose meanings will become familiar, places that will acquire memory, and customs whose significance may be understood only many years later.

This book follows that life.

As the child grows, the world grows with it. Kinship becomes more than relationship; killi carries belonging and obligation. Youth brings friendship, responsibility and courtship. Marriage opens another circle of families, exchanges and remembered practices, including terms such as Lota-pani and Dali Takka. Field and forest become not merely landscape but places of livelihood and inherited knowledge. Festival time brings food, gathering, durang and susun—song and dance—through which memory can pass from one body to another without ever becoming a written sentence.

And then, almost without noticing, the child we began with has become someone from whom another child learns.

That movement is the heart of this book.

For culture does not survive simply because a custom once existed. It survives because someone remembers when it should be performed, another remembers the words, someone knows the place, someone prepares the food, another recognizes the rhythm, and an elder can still explain why an object that appears ordinary to an outsider is anything but ordinary.

Eventually the journey approaches death. Yet burial does not necessarily bring the cultural story to an end. Mourning continues where a life has stopped. Names are spoken. Stories return. Ancestors remain within memory, and stones may preserve relationships long after the hands that placed them are gone. Terms recorded in Munda cultural documentation, including Horadiri, Saasandiri, and Ziddiri, remind us that even stone can belong to very different worlds of genealogy, boundary, birth, death and remembrance. What appears silent may carry a history.

This is why the subtitle From Birth to Burial describes a journey rather than merely a sequence of ceremonies. Between those two thresholds lies an entire cultural landscape: childhood and learning, kinship and marriage, household and livelihood, field and forest, sacred life and festivals, food and hospitality, language and oral tradition, music and dance, healing and elderhood, death, mourning and ancestral memory. These are not separate compartments. A song may belong to marriage and memory at once; food may connect household, festival and funeral; kinship may shape birth long before the chapter on kinship begins.

Nor does this book assume that there is one unchanging Munda way of doing everything. A practice may differ between villages, families, killi, generations and historical periods. What an elder remembers may not be what a young person now experiences. Something recorded a century ago may survive, may have changed, or may have disappeared. Such differences are not imperfections to be edited away.

They are part of the story.

Beside this book therefore stands its scholarly companion, the Munda Cultural Dataset (MCD). The book tells the cultural story; MCD preserves the path back to its evidence. A statement can be connected to a source, an interview to a speaker and context, a photograph to an object or event, a word to its pronunciation and meaning, and a practice to the places and circumstances in which it was actually documented. Where evidence disagrees, the disagreement can remain visible. Where knowledge is incomplete, the empty space can remain open rather than being filled with convenient certainty.

The present MCD framework contains twenty-four cultural domains, 266 subdomains and 798 candidate indicators. These numbers are not 798 declarations about Munda culture. They are 798 doors through which research may enter. Behind some, evidence already waits; behind others are questions that can be answered only through further fieldwork, careful listening and community knowledge.

That distinction matters because a living culture should never be imprisoned by the book written about it. New voices will add something. Old photographs may recover forgotten names. A village may reveal a practice undocumented elsewhere. A Mundari word may contain a distinction that English failed to preserve. A younger generation may transform what an earlier generation inherited without necessarily abandoning it.

So this book does not ask the reader merely to observe Munda customs. It asks the reader to follow a human life while watching culture travel with it—received before it can be understood, learned as the person grows, carried for a time, changed through living, passed to others, and finally entrusted once more to memory.

The child with whom we began will not remain a child. One day that child may become the elder whose voice another generation records.

And perhaps that is where “from birth to burial” reveals its deeper meaning: a human life has an ending, but what it carries may not.

Johar—and let the journey begin.

Reading the evidence

Throughout this book, source-reported material is distinguished from independently field-verified evidence; historical and contextual accounts retain their original evidentiary status; and a candidate indicator represents a question for investigation rather than an assertion of universal Munda practice. Variation, disagreement and unanswered questions are preserved because they, too, are part of the cultural record.

Entering the Archive

The Stone Beside the Cradle

A remarkable thread in the current seed corpus links birth to burial through stone. The Tribal Welfare Research Institute reports Ziddiri as a stone placed over the burial of the placenta and dried navel part of a newborn (Institute 2026). The same institutional source records named stone traditions associated with graves, genealogy and village limits, while later mortuary research documents megalithic practices including Pathalgarri, Jangtopa and Saasandiri in Ranchi and Khunti (Shekhar 2020).

This does not prove a single symbolic theory stretching from placenta to ancestor. MCD refuses that shortcut. What it does show is why an evidence-linked archive matters. A stone can be an object, a place-marker, a genealogical surface, a mortuary monument or part of a newborn-related practice. If all are stored under a single label such as “stone tradition,” the distinctions disappear. If each is stored as a stable entity linked to source, locality, event, terminology and interpretation, comparison becomes possible without pretending sameness.

The book therefore follows two paths at once. The first is the human life course. The second is the evidence chain. Figure 1.1 shows how they meet.

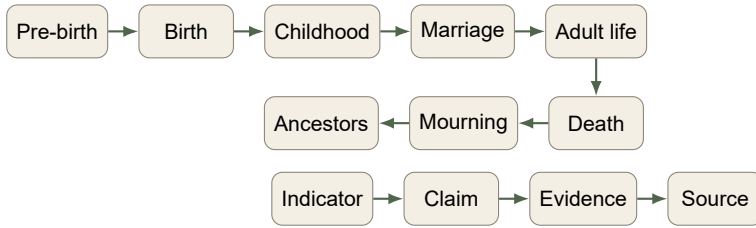

Figure 1.1: Two connected flows in MCD: the life course and the evidence chain. The life-course ordering is narrative; the evidence chain is provenance.

How the Dataset Becomes a Book

MCD is organized hierarchically: 24 domains contain 266 subdomains, and those subdomains contain 798 candidate indicators. Each indicator is designed to capture one of three complementary dimensions: presence/form, process/meaning, or variation/change. The architecture therefore asks not only whether a practice exists, but also how it occurs, what it means to participants, and how it differs across site, kili, gender, generation or time.

Figure 2.1 shows how candidate indicators are distributed across the 24 domains. Table 2.1 gives the exact counts and, crucially, the number of source-backed claims currently attached to each domain. The contrast between the two columns should guide the reader's confidence: a dense indicator structure is not the same thing as a dense evidence base.

The database is hybrid by design. Stable entities and relationships belong in relational tables; extensible ethnographic detail can be stored without repeatedly redesigning the schema. The public book, however, does not expose implementation complexity for its own sake. It uses the database for one purpose: to keep evidence connected.

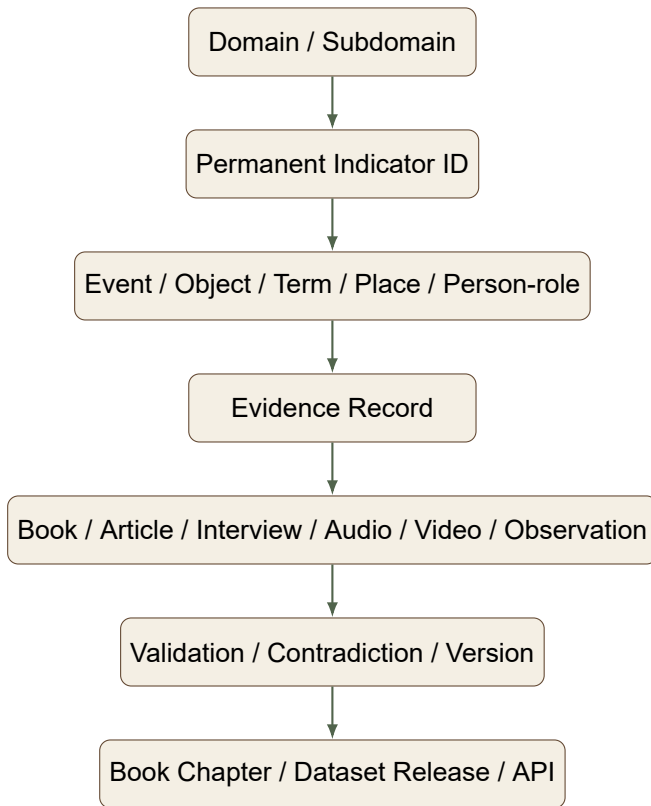

Figure 2.3: The publication architecture: a cultural statement can travel from classification to evidence and then forward to publication without losing provenance.

Sources, Places and the Discipline of Not Overclaiming

The v1.0 source corpus contains government and Tribal Research Institute pages, a foundational ethnographic monograph, a legal primary record, anthropological taxonomy resources, a peer-reviewed mortuary study, and an academic ethnobotanical record. Figure 3.1 summarizes the source types represented in the seed corpus. The sources are heterogeneous by design because no single genre can document an entire life course.

The Tribal Welfare Research Institute's Munda profile is the most prolific seed source for named practices and terminology (Institute 2026). The Khunti district cultural profile contributes livelihood, sacred-life and festival context (Khunti 2026). Roy's 1912 monograph provides a historical anchor, while its searchable index points to dedicated sections on birth ceremonies and songs (Roy 1912a; Roy 1912b). Shekhar's mortuary study supplies the most detailed current source represented in the dataset for funerary practices in Ranchi and Khunti (Shekhar 2020).

The database also contains broader Jharkhand festival pages. These are retained because context matters, but their claims are explicitly tagged contextual, not Munda-exclusive rather than silently converted into Munda-specific facts (Jharkhand 2026a; Jharkhand 2026b). This distinction is one of the book's central methodological rules.

The rule used in every chapter

A candidate indicator is a question. A source-backed claim is a documented statement. A field observation is an event-linked record. A community validation is a later layer of confirmation or correction. These categories are never treated as interchangeable.

Part II

From Birth to Belonging

Pregnancy & Pre-birth

Before a child enters the visible world, a society may already surround pregnancy with expectations, cautions, food practices, protective acts and explanations. MCD therefore begins before birth. The current seed corpus does not yet contain a Munda-specific source-backed claim for this domain; instead, it contains a structured field architecture designed to prevent pregnancy knowledge from disappearing into a generic category called ‘birth’. This absence is itself informative: the domain is ready for systematic field documentation rather than premature description.

4.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

4.2 Coverage map

Table 4.1 lists the subdomains that structure future documentation in this domain. Each subdomain is represented by candidate indicators for presence/-form, process/meaning, and variation/change wherever applicable.

DOM-01-S02	Food & diet
DOM-01-S03	Restrictions & taboos
DOM-01-S04	Protection & belief
DOM-01-S05	Birth preparation

Birth & Newborn

Birth is where the archive first becomes materially vivid. In the seed corpus, birth is not only a biological event but a point at which ritual action, specialized roles and material memorialization enter the record. The current evidence includes a reported ceremony for twins, a reported stone associated with placenta and the dried navel part, and a historical bibliographic pointer to Roy's dedicated discussion of birth ceremonies.

5.1 What the current evidence records

Cham utarna — CLM-000004

The TRI page reports Cham utarna as a ceremony performed by the Pahan for the welfare and longevity of twins, described specifically for a brother-sister twin pair. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Cham utarna

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Ziddiri — CLM-000013

The TRI page describes Ziddiri as a stone placed over the burial of the placenta and dried navel part of a newborn. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Ziddiri

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Historical birth section — CLM-000031

The Wikisource index to Roy 1912 identifies a dedicated section titled “Birth and its ceremonies” at pages 456–460. (Roy 1912b)

Geographic scope: Chota Nagpur

Status: bibliographic_pointer; field verification: not_field_verified.

5.2 Coverage map

Table 5.1 lists the subdomains that structure future documentation in this domain. Each subdomain is represented by candidate indicators for presence/-form, process/meaning, and variation/change wherever applicable.

DOM-02-S06	Purification & reintegration

ID	Subdomain
DOM-02-S07	Naming
DOM-02-S08	Special births

The juxtaposition of Cham utarna, Ziddiri and Roy's historical birth section shows why the dataset separates a named practice, a material object and a bibliographic pointer. They are three different evidence forms and should remain three different records even when they contribute to the same chapter.

Infancy & Childhood

Infancy and childhood are the long corridor between being born and becoming socially competent. The dataset deliberately separates feeding, childcare, play, discipline, language learning, cultural learning and the acquisition of work from the single label ‘childhood’. At present these are primarily candidate indicators awaiting direct documentation. The design resists a common archival problem: richly recording spectacular ceremonies while leaving ordinary cultural learning invisible.

6.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

6.2 Coverage map

Table 6.1 lists the subdomains that structure future documentation in this domain. Each subdomain is represented by candidate indicators for presence/-form, process/meaning, and variation/change wherever applicable.

DOM-03-S06	Language learning
DOM-03-S07	Cultural learning
DOM-03-S08	Work learning

Youth & Adolescence

Youth is not treated merely as an age bracket. The dataset asks about socialization, responsibility, courtship, performance, education, migration and change. HRAF’s OCM framework provides a cross-cultural anchor for puberty and initiation, but MCD does not presume that an OCM category is a Munda practice. Instead, OCM functions as a coverage check while field evidence determines what is locally meaningful.

7.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

Kinship, Kili & Social Organization

A life-course narrative cannot be understood without the relations that make a person socially located. In MCD, kili, descent, kin terms, obligations, exogamy, residence and social organization form the relational grammar beneath marriage and family life. The seed evidence gives this domain unusual depth because institutional and legal-historical sources both point to kili as a consequential social category.

8.1 What the current evidence records

Kili/clan system — CLM-000001

The TRI page describes Munda clans as Killi, patrilineal in transmission, and traditionally associated with common ancestry and totemic origin. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Killi

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Kili exogamy — CLM-000030

The Supreme Court judgment quotes Roy describing Munda society as divided into exogamous groups called kilis and records a customary prohibition on marriage within the same kili. (India 1970)

Source-reported term: kili

Geographic scope: Chota Nagpur

Status: historical/legal-source-reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

8.2 Coverage map

Table 8.1 lists the subdomains that structure future documentation in this domain. Each subdomain is represented by candidate indicators for presence/-form, process/meaning, and variation/change wherever applicable.

The legal-historical record reinforces the value of independent provenance. A Supreme Court judgment quotes Roy on Munda kili exogamy, offering a second route by which the same social concept enters the archive (India 1970). Agreement across source genres can strengthen a research trail, but it still does not substitute for contemporary locality-specific field verification.

Courtship & Marriage

Marriage is one of the places where a cultural archive can easily become a list of picturesque acts. MCD instead treats it as a sequence of decisions, negotiations, exchanges, ritual actions and post-marital consequences. The current corpus records Lota-pani, Dali Takka, a reported week-long festive frame, widow remarriage, and an OCM mapping for arranging marriage. These are source-reported starting points, not claims of uniform practice across all Munda communities.

9.1 What the current evidence records

Lota-pani engagement — CLM-000005

The TRI page identifies Lota-pani as an engagement ceremony. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Lota-pani

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Dali Takka — CLM-000006

The TRI page reports Dali Takka as a monetary gift generally paid to paternal guardians before marriage. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Dali Takka

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Marriage duration — CLM-000007

The TRI page describes marriage as a major life ritual and a week-long festivity. (Institute 2026)

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Widow remarriage — CLM-000009

The TRI page states that widow marriage is common. (Institute 2026)

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Adult Household & Family Life

The wedding ends, but social life does not. Household formation, parenthood, division of labour, property, inheritance, care and family decision-making are where customary life becomes routine. The present seed corpus is structurally rich but evidentially thin here. That is precisely why the domain is retained as a first-class part of the book rather than treated as a residual category after marriage.

10.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

10.2 Coverage map

Livelihood, Land & Ecology

Land is not merely background scenery. The Khunti district profile describes Munda livelihood through settled agriculture supplemented by forest-product collection, hunting, fishing and animal husbandry. A second source points toward the ritual uses of plants in birth/naming, marriage, death and festivals. Together these records suggest that the life course cannot be separated analytically from ecology and material availability.

11.1 What the current evidence records

Subsistence context — CLM-000014

The Khunti district cultural profile describes Mundas as settled agriculturists, with forest-product collection and hunting, fishing and animal husbandry as supplementary activities. (Khunti 2026)

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Ritual plants — CLM-000035

A 2022 botany abstract reports that Munda rituals and festivals in Khunti are closely related to plants and explicitly mentions birth/naming, kanbhedi, marriage, godna, death and several festivals as contexts for ethnobotanical documentation. (Topno and Kandir 2022)

Source-reported term: kanbhedi; godna

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: abstract_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Religion, Cosmology & Sacred Life

The sacred world in the current archive is organized through named beings, ancestral presence, specialized roles and sacred places. The Khunti district profile identifies Singbonga, the Pahan, the Sarna and ancestral spirits called Ora Bongako. Roy’s historical index also points to Sarna as an ethnographic subject. The dataset preserves these as source-linked propositions that require locality-specific interpretation rather than flattening them into a universal creed.

12.1 What the current evidence records

Pahan and Sarna — CLM-000015

The Khunti district profile states that the Pahan is the village priest at the Sarna sacred grove and worships village deities. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Pahan; Sarna

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Singbonga — CLM-000016

The Khunti district profile identifies Singbonga as the supreme benevolent deity in its description of Munda beliefs. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Singbonga

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Ancestral spirits — CLM-000017

The Khunti district profile describes ancestral spirits (Ora Bongako) and states that their blessings are invoked in social and religious ceremonies. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Ora Bongako

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Historical Sarna reference — CLM-000033

The Wikisource index to Roy 1912 lists Sarna among indexed ethnographic subjects. (Roy 1912b)

Source-reported term: Sarna

Geographic scope: Chota Nagpur

Status: bibliographic_pointer; field verification: not_field_verified.

Festivals & Seasonal Life

A calendar can be a second biography. Sarhul, Mage, Karam and Sohrai recur in the seed evidence as seasonal frames through which land, ancestors, cattle, flowers, dance and collective life become visible. The source corpus also contains state-level descriptions that are explicitly marked as contextual rather than Munda-exclusive. MCD therefore keeps two statements apart: ‘this is described in Jharkhand’ and ‘this has been verified for the sampled Munda community.’

13.1 What the current evidence records

Seasonal festivals — CLM-000002

The TRI page lists Mage Parab, Phagu, Karam, Baha Parab, Sarhul and Sohrai among festivals celebrated by Munda communities. (Institute 2026)

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Sarhul season — CLM-000018

The Khunti district profile describes Sarhul as a March–April flower festival in which Sal flowers are brought to the Sarna and the Pahan propitiates deities. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Sarhul

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Mage — CLM-000019

The Khunti district profile describes Mage as celebrated on the full moon day of Paush and associates it with spirits of deceased ancestors. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Mage

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Karam — CLM-000020

The Khunti district profile describes Karam in August–September, with a Karam sapling brought from the forest and overnight song/dance with rice beer. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Karam

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Sohrai — CLM-000021

The Khunti district profile describes Sohrai in October–November, including lighting lamps and washing cattle sheds. (Khunti 2026)

Source-reported term: Sohrai

Geographic scope: Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Sarhul ritual sequence — contextual — CLM-000036

A Jharkhand government page describes Sarhul with Sal flowers, Pahan fasting and worship, offerings, music, distribution of Sal flowers and Handia. The page explicitly addresses multiple tribal communities, so this record is contextual and requires Munda-specific field verification. (Jharkhand 2026b)

Source-reported term: Sarhul; Handia

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: contextual_not_munda_exclusive; field verification: not_field_verified.

Karam — contextual — CLM-000037

The Jharkhand government describes Karam as a youth-centered festival involving forest collection, worship, song and dance. This is contextual state-level evidence, not Munda-exclusive. (Jharkhand 2026a)

Source-reported term: Karam

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: contextual_not_munda_exclusive; field verification: not_field_verified.

Sohrai — contextual — CLM-000038

The Jharkhand government describes Sohrai as a cattle-care festival with lamps, washing cattle, vermilion-oil application and garlanding. This is contextual state-level evidence, not Munda-exclusive. (Jharkhand 2026a)

Source-reported term: Sohrai

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: contextual_not_munda_exclusive; field verification: not_field_verified.

Food, Drink & Hospitality

Food and drink often carry more cultural work than a menu can show: they can mark hospitality, ritual obligation, seasonal abundance, restriction or collective participation. MCD gives food, beverages and hospitality their own domain so that references such as rice beer in festival contexts can later be linked to preparation, actors, occasions and meanings rather than stored as isolated mentions.

14.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

Dress, Ornament & Body Culture

Dress, ornament and body culture are currently an evidence gap in the seed corpus, not an invitation to fill the chapter with generalized tribal imagery. The dataset therefore preserves a disciplined set of questions concerning clothing, adornment, ceremonial dress, age and gender distinctions, materials, manufacture and historical change. What is not yet evidenced remains visibly open.

15.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

House, Architecture & Material Culture

Material culture is where an archive can connect words to things. Houses, ritual spaces, vessels, tools, crafts and stones can each become stable entities linked to photographs, events and explanations. Although the seed corpus is strongest on memorial stones rather than domestic architecture, the data model allows the same evidence discipline to be applied to every material object encountered in future fieldwork.

16.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

Language & Cultural Lexicon

A cultural archive becomes fragile when local words are translated once and then forgotten. MCD therefore stores terms as entities with stable identifiers, source provenance and validation status. The current term list includes Killi, Pahan, Sarna, Singbonga, Ora Bongako, durang, susun, Cham utarna, Lotapani and Dali Takka, among others. Their spellings are preserved as source-reported forms pending community linguistic validation.

Oral Tradition

Oral tradition is not an ornament to the archive; it is one of its principal evidentiary forms. Roy's historical index identifies a substantial songs section, while MCD prepares fields for songs, prayers, blessings, proverbs, myths, oral histories and ritual utterances. Future recordings can therefore be linked to transcripts, translations, indicators, occasions and permissions rather than remaining anonymous audio files.

18.1 What the current evidence records

Historical songs section — CLM-000032

The Wikisource index to Roy 1912 identifies a songs section at pages 508–542. (Roy 1912b)

Geographic scope: Chota Nagpur

Status: bibliographic_pointer; field verification: not_field_verified.

Music, Dance & Performance

The seed corpus contains a small but evocative vocabulary of performance: durang for song and susun for dance, with named forms such as Jadur, Karam Susun and Mage Susun reported by the Tribal Welfare Research Institute. MCD treats performance as action in context: who performs, when, for whom, in which event, with what instruments, and with what changes across generations.

19.1 What the current evidence records

Song and dance terminology — CLM-000003

The TRI page reports durang for song and susun for dance, and lists Jadur, Karam Susun and Mage Susun as Munda dances. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: durang; susun

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field_verification: not_field_verified.

Community Institutions & Customary Life

Customary life is also institutional life. Authority, village roles, collective decisions, dispute resolution, sanctions and community labour shape the conditions under which customs are enacted. The present source-backed corpus does not yet populate these fields sufficiently, so the chapter functions as a methodological bridge: it shows where future interviews with role-holders must connect personal narrative to institutional structure.

20.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

Health, Healing & Wellbeing

Health and healing sit at the boundary between everyday practice, ecology, belief and care. The current release deliberately avoids turning general claims about ‘tribal medicine’ into Munda-specific facts. Instead, it prepares a structure for illness concepts, healers, medicinal plants, protective practices and changes in relation to formal health systems. The result is an explicit research space awaiting evidence.

Elderhood & Knowledge Transmission

No book about cultural continuity can treat elders only as respondents. MCD makes elderhood and knowledge transmission a life-course domain in its own right. It asks how ritual knowledge is held, how stories move between generations, how grandchildren learn, how elders are cared for and where transmission is at risk. This is one of the domains in which future fieldwork can transform the archive from description into a record of cultural succession.

22.1 Current evidence status

No source-backed claim in the v1.0 seed corpus is assigned to this domain. The chapter therefore remains intentionally prospective: it describes the coverage architecture without converting candidate prompts into cultural facts.

Death, Dying & Funeral

Death is the point at which the seed corpus becomes densest. Institutional and ethnoarchaeological sources record body treatment, burial and cremation, variation in funerary treatment, and distinctions associated with circumstances of death. Rather than force these into a single ‘funeral custom’, MCD separates dying, body preparation, disposal, grave orientation, objects, food and exceptional cases so that actual sequences can be reconstructed event by event.

23.1 What the current evidence records

Post-death body treatment — CLM-000008

The TRI page reports that scented oil and turmeric are applied to the face and body after death. (Institute 2026)

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Burial and cremation — CLM-000022

Shekhar reports that both burial and cremation occur among Munda communities, with geographic and circumstantial variation. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Rapa; Topa

Geographic scope: Ranchi and Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Unnatural-death variation — CLM-000028

Shekhar reports that funerary treatment differs for deaths categorized as unnatural, including separate disposal locations and reduced ceremonial elaboration. (Shekhar 2020)

Geographic scope: Ranchi and Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Figure 23.1 shows how the mortuary evidence can be represented as a sequence of linked research questions rather than a single undifferentiated custom.

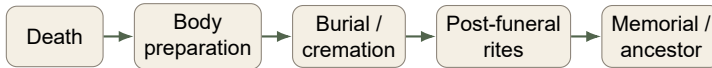

Figure 23.1: Analytical mortuary sequence used by MCD. Individual communities and events may differ; the sequence is a documentation scaffold, not a prescribed ritual order.

Mourning, Post-death & Ancestors

After burial, the archive does not end. The current evidence describes ceremonies and stones through which memory, bones, household presence and genealogy are organized: Umbul ader, Hayom, Pathalgarri, Jangtopa, Saasandiri, Horadiri and Patthalgari. These terms do not all denote the same kind of thing, and different sources use overlapping spellings. MCD's task is precisely to preserve those distinctions while linking each claim to its evidence and locality.

24.1 What the current evidence records

Patthalgari — CLM-000010

The TRI page describes Patthalgari as a stone-erection tradition associated with graves or village entrances, including genealogical inscriptions. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Patthalgari

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Horadiri — CLM-000011

The TRI page identifies Horadiri as a stone on which a family tree is written. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Horadiri

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Saasandiri / Chalpadiri — CLM-000012

The TRI page lists Chalpadiri or Saasandiri as a stone associated with marking village boundaries and limits. (Institute 2026)

Source-reported term: Chalpadiri; Saasandiri

Geographic scope: Jharkhand

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Umbul ader — CLM-000023

Shekhar describes Umbul ader as a ceremony calling the spirit/shadow back to the house after burial in a documented Ranchi case. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Umbul ader

Geographic scope: Jagannathpur Mauja, Ranchi

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Hayom — CLM-000024

Shekhar documents Hayom as a shaving-associated ceremony following Umbul ader, involving the Pahan and a symbolic clay effigy. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Hayom

Geographic scope: Jagannathpur Mauja, Ranchi

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Pathalgarri — CLM-000025

Shekhar documents Pathalgarri as erection of a megalithic monument for the dead in a Khunti case study. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Pathalgarri

Geographic scope: Ithe, Murhu, Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Jangtopa — CLM-000026

Shekhar describes Jangtopa as a secondary/ceremonial bone-burial festival, with symbolic substitution possible when bones cannot be recovered. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Jangtopa; Jang-ba; Harggarri

Geographic scope: Ranchi and Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Saasandiri family capstone — CLM-000027

Shekhar states that mortal remains of the same family may be buried under the same capstone or dolmen known as Saasandiri. (Shekhar 2020)

Source-reported term: Saasandiri

Geographic scope: Ranchi and Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Historical Sasan reference — CLM-000034

The Wikisource index to Roy 1912 lists Sasan among indexed ethnographic subjects. (Roy 1912b)

Source-reported term: Sasan

Geographic scope: Chota Nagpur

Status: bibliographic_pointer; field verification: not_field_verified.

Cultural Change & Continuity

Culture is not measured by how little it changes. MCD therefore records persistence, adaptation, discontinuation, revival, emergence and variation as analytically distinct states. Shekhar’s mortuary study already reports variation associated with age, status, economic condition, rank and circumstances of death. Future fieldwork can extend this logic to education, migration, urbanization, technology and religious change without treating difference as cultural failure.

25.1 What the current evidence records

Mortuary variation — CLM-000029

Shekhar reports variation in mortuary rites and monuments by age, status, economic condition, rank and circumstances of death. (Shekhar 2020)

Geographic scope: Ranchi and Khunti

Status: source_reported; field verification: not_field_verified.

Part III

From Evidence to a Reusable Cultural Record

Evidence, Provenance and Validation

This domain is the methodological conscience of the archive. Every important claim must be able to answer: who or what is the source, what kind of evidence supports it, where is that evidence located, what is its verification status, and does another source contradict it? The evidence-provenance layer is what allows the book to remain readable without becoming unverifiable.

The present release contains 38 evidence records, each corresponding to a source-backed claim. At this stage the representation is predominantly paraphrase-based and source-reported. As fieldwork expands, the same evidence table can point to interviews, observation notes, photographs, audio, video, material objects, archival scans and community validation records. Figure 26.1 shows the intended relationship.

The model protects the original evidence from later interpretation. A recording can remain unchanged while its transcription is corrected; a claim can be revised while the source record persists; an indicator can be split into variants without deleting the identifier from which the split arose. This is why MCD is better understood as a versioned knowledge system than as a fixed spreadsheet.

Book and Research Mapping

The last domain turns evidence into scholarship without breaking the chain of provenance. Indicators, claims, objects, media and observations can be mapped to chapters, tables, figures and future research releases. In other words, the book is not a destination outside the dataset; it is one controlled view of the dataset at a particular version and date.

The publication layer is deliberately empty in the original v1.0 seed package because the database was built before the book. This volume supplies the first systematic mapping by grouping the 24 domains into a reader-facing narrative. In future releases, individual indicators, evidence records and media objects can be assigned to specific chapter sections, tables, figures or appendices.

The practical benefit is reproducibility. A future edition can say not merely that a paragraph was “based on fieldwork”, but exactly which indicator IDs, event IDs, interview segments and source records supported it. The book can then evolve without severing itself from the archive that produced it.

What Commonality Should Mean

The title of this project contains a difficult word: commonalities. Commonality must not become a synonym for authenticity, nor should a majority practice erase a legitimate local variant. MCD therefore treats commonality as a measurable distribution of documented evidence across adequately assessed sites, participants or observed events.

For an indicator i , a site-level commonality measure may be written as provided that unknown, not asked, not applicable and refused are not silently counted as absence. This measure describes distribution in the sampled evidence; it does not rank cultural importance.

$$C_i^{(site)} = \frac{n_i^{present}}{n_i^{assessed}},$$

A fuller analysis can distinguish site commonality, participant recognition and direct observation. The point is not to turn culture into a score. The point is to make statements such as “widely documented”, “localized”, “remembered but rarely practised”, or “contested” traceable to the evidence from which they were derived.

The Work Still Ahead

The present dataset is structurally complete enough to begin disciplined fieldwork but not evidentially complete enough to claim a finished ethnography of all 24 domains. Figure 2.2 makes the imbalance visible: death, post-death practices, festivals, sacred life, marriage and kinship currently carry most of the source-backed evidence, while many everyday and life-course domains remain candidate-rich but claim-poor.

This is the book's most important negative finding. It tells the research team where not to assume. Pregnancy, childhood socialization, dress, domestic material culture, health/healing, community institutions and elderhood require deeper direct documentation. The archive has already created a place for those records; fieldwork must now fill that place with source-linked evidence.

The 798 Candidate Cultural Indicators

The following catalogue is the complete candidate-indicator architecture in MCD v1.0. These entries are research prompts. Their presence in the catalogue must not be read as evidence that the corresponding practice exists in every Munda community, or at all. Their purpose is coverage: to make it harder for fieldwork to forget a dimension of cultural life.

DOM-01 — Pregnancy & Pre-birth

DOM-01-S01 — Pregnancy recognition

- IND-000001 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of pregnancy recognition.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000002 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for pregnancy recognition.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000003 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in pregnancy recognition.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-01-S02 — Food & diet

- IND-000004 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of food and diet.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000005 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for food and diet.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000006 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in food and diet.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-01-S03 — Restrictions & taboos

- IND-000007 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of restrictions and taboos.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000008 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for restrictions and taboos.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000009 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in restrictions and taboos.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-01-S04 — Protection & belief

- IND-000010 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of protection and belief.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000011 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for protection and belief.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000012 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in protection and belief.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-01-S05 — Birth preparation

- IND-000013 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of birth preparation.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000014 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for birth preparation.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000015 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in birth preparation.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02 — Birth & Newborn

DOM-02-S01 — Labour & delivery

- IND-000016 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of labour and delivery.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000017 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for labour and delivery.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000018 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in labour and delivery.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S02 — Birth attendants

- IND-000019 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of birth attendants.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000020 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for birth attendants.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000021 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in birth attendants.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S03 — Newborn care

- IND-000022 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of newborn care.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000023 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for newborn care.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000024 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in newborn care.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S04 — Cord & placenta

- IND-000025 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of cord and placenta.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000026 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for cord and placenta.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000027 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in cord and placenta.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S05 — Maternal care

- IND-000028 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of maternal care.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000029 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for maternal care.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000030 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in maternal care.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S06 — Purification & reintegration

- IND-000031 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of purification and reintegration.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000032 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for purification and reintegration.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000033 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in purification and reintegration.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S07 — Naming

- IND-000034 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of naming.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000035 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for naming.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000036 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in naming.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-02-S08 — Special births

- IND-000037 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of special births.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000038 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for special births.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000039 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in special births.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-03 — Infancy & Childhood

DOM-03-S01 — Infant feeding

- IND-000040 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of infant feeding.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000041 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for infant feeding.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000042 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in infant feeding.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-03-S02 — Childcare

- IND-000043 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of childcare.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000044 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for childcare.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000045 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in childcare.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-03-S03 — Socialization

- IND-000046 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of socialization.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000047 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for socialization.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
- IND-000048 variation_change: Document site, kili, gender, generation and historical variation in socialization.
Prompt: How does it vary across sites or groups, and how has it changed over time?

DOM-03-S04 — Discipline

- IND-000049 presence_form: Document the presence, local name and form of discipline.
Prompt: What is it, what is it called locally, and what form does it take?
- IND-000050 process_meaning: Document actors, timing, place, sequence, objects, words and participant meaning for discipline.
Prompt: Who does what, when, where, how, with which objects/words, and what does it mean to participants?
